Caring for an Aging Loved One

We all know that our parents, spouse, and other family members will eventually grow old and face the inevitable health challenges. We even understand that sickness and death are part of living in a fallen world. But we are never quite ready for these realities to hit our loved ones, especially when a debilitating disease gradually robs them of a once active life or seeps away their memories.

If you find yourself facing this situation, whether with a parent or a spouse, you can take steps to become proactive by understanding some of what this season will bring, including:

Lingering Grief

Long before an aging spouse or parent takes their final breath, you will experience underlying grief as you observe their loss of vitality, strength, mental faculties, and other traits that make them the person you love. Mixed with the physical and emotional exhaustion this season can bring - you may even feel yourself slipping into depression. Seek help to avoid allowing these feelings to overtake you, but recognize that such emotions are normal and testify to how valuable the person you are losing has been.

Special Grace

Caregivers' most common duties are transportation, grocery shopping, household chores, help with medications, and assistance with bathing and dressing.

Despite the humble nature of such activities, the majority of caregivers use words like "rewarding" and "happy" to describe the caregiving process. God gives special grace to those who humble themselves to serve the aging and ailing.

Changing Roles

The caregiving child gradually becomes the parent. The caregiving spouse is no longer able to rely on her husband's strength or wife's support. Primary caregivers can also encounter strained relationships with other members of the family who may expect input on or question difficult decisions. In one way or another, expect these relationships to change as a loved one's health deteriorates.

Family Stress

For those who are married and raising their children, caring for an aging loved one can add tremendous stress to the family dynamic. There is less time, less marital energy, less patience with childhood irresponsibility, and less ability to give everyone the attention they need. That's why it is important to involve the whole family in the caregiving experience. (Even young children can hold a hand or give a hug!) Everyone will need God's special grace, so be intentional about giving them opportunities to participate in what can be described as the ultimate family service project.

If you are in the midst of this season, our prayer is that God will give you the strength and grace to face the prolonged grief and quiet sacrifices required.

*Dear Lord - please come alongside those of us called to care for an aging or dying loved one.
Help us to "be Jesus" like we've never been before!
Amen.*
